Bilingualism and Spanglish in the United States
Bilingüismo y Espanglish en los Estados Unidos

APRIL 26, 2018
10:00 AM – 12:00 PM
SDSU SCRIPPS COTTAGE

Event open to the public
An exploration of current issues relevant to Spanish-English bilingualism in the United States, such as the acquisition and use of Spanish as a heritage language; the role that it plays in the social, educational, and political environment; the connections between Spanish and identity, and attitudes towards Spanglish and other US varieties of Spanish.

Maria Carreira – Professor of Spanish at CSU, Long Beach and co-director of the National Heritage Language Resource at UCLA. Her research focuses on US Spanish and heritage language pedagogy. Her recent work focuses on identity, resilience, and heritage language development and maintenance.

Ana Sánchez-Muñoz – Professor of Linguistics and Chicana/o Studies at CSU, Northridge. Her research focuses on language variation and change, bilingualism, language acquisition, and situations of language maintenance and language contact, particularly between Spanish and English in the US.

Rachel Showstack – Assistant Professor of Spanish and Linguistics at Wichita State University. Her research addresses the social aspects of Spanish in the US, including issues of identity and ideology in Spanish heritage language learning, language policy, and community-based language education.
